

Broadcasting news is a large responsibility, and in a democratic society, it should report both sides of issues. If I, a citizen, hear just one side, the news becomes that of a dictatorship denying me of all the information so that I may make my own choice about the issue. As an ordinary citizen this issue seems so clear. Why do you on the FCC argue against this basic tenet of truth? Is your role not to represent the citizens? I hope that personal gain has not tainted your moral obligation to see the issue with truth and clarity. Informed citizens are crucial to a democracy - that means all information not just the position of a few at the top!
